Sometimes alone I like to be
In a place where I think no one else will go
On a windy hill above the sea
Watching the surf on the shore below.

For I've seen the leaves on an Autumn day
And the snowy hills on a winter night
And I've seen the cool, clear stream at play
On shining stones in it's rushing flight.

But there'll never be in this world, I know
Another sight that will thrill me more
Than the foamy caps on waves like snow
As they break and pound on a barren shore.

But will it always be so fine?
With man's great power and cunning way
Will he somehow tame this great wide sea?
I hope I never see that day.

Because while I live, I'll want to be
In a place where I think no one else will go
On a windy hill above the sea
Watching the surf on the shore below.

The entertainment in those days consisted of walking to the beach, either Dyer's Hollow or Station Hollow (now known as Ballston Beach). Sometimes when we were older we'd walk from one Hollow to the other. We often went bathing at Station Hollow as the men of the Life saving service were there to watch us and would not let us go in if the waves were too strong and a bad undertow. When we were older we often went to the Life Saving Station for gun drills and boat drills. It was early in the morning and we had to get up early to go. We knew all the crew. At first many were older men who had been to sea and we were relatives of many of them. Afterwards younger men came in. We knew all of them and I'll never forget the hot ginger bread the cook used to make and of which we often got a piece. I never liked ginger bread at home, but that Station ginger bread was special.

On March 14, 1895 the 1.576 ton schooner CHARLES A. CAMPBELL stranded in the area of PamRiver Station at 4 am during thick foggy weather. The schooner was lying easily and in no danger as the surf was not dangerous at the time. Two days later the vessel was floated and towed to Provincetown Harbor by tugs. The CHARLES A. CAMPBELL ran aground on Cape Cod again on October 7, 1912 when she hit the beach four miles south of the Cahoon's Hollow station in Wellfleet. Bound from Norfolk, Va. To Boston with a cargo of coal, she was again removed from the grounding without a loss.

We always went to a "Time at the Hall" (Town Hall). There were two, one by the Congregational church and one by the Methodist, a Fair down stairs and entertainment upstairs by local and summer people. I myself took part in a play there and really enjoyed it. Always the Ball family did something to entertain. Usually Mary (Ball) did dances for us.

Lady Katherine Guelofian

Remember Lady Katherine Guelofian, who for many years owned and operated a summer guest house and bazaar at Ballston Beach? She was a short, heavyset person, with the musical, lilting accent of her native Persia still in her speech. She had bought beachfront land here early in the 20's and built a summer hotel type building atop the dunes just north of Ballston Beach. In later years she expanded her complex to include several smaller rental units off North Pamet road and there she operated a bazaar stocked with oriental rugs and bric-a-brac from her native land. Her husband was a general in the Persian army. He remained in his homeland for reasons of political security while Lady Katherine and her beautiful daughters (and they were beautiful-dark, sloe-eyed, willowy of figure and mysteriously coy in their mannerisms) maintained and expanded the Truro operation.

We can recall those busy days of the tourist season when Johnnie Rose, general caretaker, chauffeur, handyman at the Guelofian camp would sweep through Truro Square in the bottle-green Dodge station wagon, with Lady Katherine perched majestically beside him on the front seat, on his way to Truro Depot to pick up guests. Lady K. would imperiously gesture to John to stop the royal carriage and she'd lean over the running board and engage the attention of the clerk at Eben Paine's or Mary Howard's and place a last minute supplementary order for groceries, "....and 10 pounds off sugar and four dussen ecks, and iff you please, tell Meester Williams, der feeshman , to stop by if he hass fresh mackerel," and off they'd drive. A few minutes later they come back through the square and the station wagon would be loaded to the scuppers with babbling, excited prospective boarders.

Lady Guelofian would keep the summer folks practically as a captive audience, for the length of their sojourn. Of course, some of the pretty guests would drift down to the Pamet river Coast Guard Station nearby and flirt with Seraphine Rego, the handsome, muscular surfman on watch. But for the most part, they would be well regimented by Lady Katherine. She organized their time from morning till night, with community activities such as craft fairs (everyone was expected to gather shells from the beach and make ashtrays, or some such), trips to the bay shore where they dug steamer clams and toted them back to the lodge to be added to the menu, and group singing (percussion was aided by sundry gongs,cymbals and bells brought from the old country). When time lagged on the guests hands and the tide was wrong for swimming on the incomparably beautiful beach, why they'd fetch all hands down on the sandy strand and build a bonfire, turn on the feeble phonograph, pike on the Persian discs and give lessons in oriental dancing. The Guelofian flyers advertising the summer business used to point that out. Interpretive dancing is taught to develop body tone, to relax the city dweller so that he can return to his desk refreshed and to restore pride of a well conditioned muscular system to the jaded housewife)

"Hogwash!" Capt Hernando Kelley of the nearby Coast Guard Station used to say. "It's nawthin but belly dancin'. I've seen 'em,night after night, and so have my men. It's disgraceful. Them furriners ain't go no morals at all." And he kept up his surveillance the whole summer long.

North Pamet Cranberry Operation 1900

Life in Truro was very different than it is now. There were very few hardened roads, mostly soft sand where the sand would drift off the wheels of the carts and carriages. It was not until 1926 that the North Pamet Road was hardened, although in 1925 it was hardened from Ballston Beach to John B. Dyer's pasture bars. In 1926 the selectmen did put seaweed on the rest of the Pamet north to the dike. We could then use our model T Ford and go directly to the center of the town without going way around by the way of the beeach down the South Pamet.

It was an event when anyone went by the house. Some days no horse & team went by. The Atwoods would go to their garden in front and Franklin Spalding would go to Cousin John's for milk, so you can see if any one did drive by or walk, we really took notice. In those days there was only one small tree between the Enos-Reining house and ours.

Morrises on footbridge

Isaac Rich had a very prosperous store on the south Pamet near the meadow. It was just across from the Peter Morris house now owned by Bloomberg. He bought a strip of land across the meadow so people could use the foot bridge then go on his land to the store. He kept about everything even buttons for ladies dresses. I still have buttons on the card from the store. People would walk over through the woods to trade there. His wife kept the store and his daughter Louisa ran the house.

A story my mother-in-law, Louisa, told me was of her father finding a piece of junk on the back shore and in order to get some of the metal melted off, he put it in the store oven to melt. It proved to be a shell and blew the stove up. The old man was very chagrined, hitched up his horse, drove to Wellfleet and brought back a new stove very much relieved to think no one was hurt. My husband has told me of going to the store and asking his grandmother for cheese for his Pop. I am sure he got some but every one knew he wanted it for himself.

Robert Nathan

Janet Nathan (Tenney) 1940's at the Parsonage

ROBERT NATHAN

• Robert Nathan and his wife, Janet, spend their summers at Truro, on Cape Cod. Their house was formerly the old parsonage. "Journal for Josephine," Mr. Nathan's recent book, is a daily record of events in the Nathan household during the past summer and a tribute to his wife, the Josephine of the book: "God bless all capable women who can do a woman's job and leave the slow hours of dreaming to the men."

• Gardening, canning, plane spotting, clamming and swimming are the principal summer activities. Besides work, of course.

• Nine-year-old Frances is Mrs. Nathan's daughter. Mr. Nathan says of her, "Like most little girls, she is innocent, provocative, sensitive and unreasonable, all at once."

• A number of swords of 16th and 17th century French and Spanish workmanship adorn the study. Mr. Nathan was once an active member of the Fencers Club of New York and studied foil and sabre in Florence. The 16th-century iron chest has been a family possession for a long time. The original complicated lock is still in workable condition.

• Crossing the moors to the ocean or the bay for a swim or a picnic lunch is part of the day's fun on the Cape.
